Foreword

Helina Chan

This exhibition marks a breakthrough for Boo, as a Singaporean artist, a painter with many ideas and most importantly a citizen with good morals. The honesty and seriousness in Boo's work can be seen in his depiction of derelict shopping malls and cathedrals where he reflected on the modern state we live in, and on the times where consumerism has shifted our values and beliefs. As he moved away from painting spaces to figuration, his stylistic brush marks and use of palette knife adjusted to shape more naturalistic, almost watercolor-like feel to the paintings. This is clearly seen in these new series, where drips of paint not only signify rain, but also depict the washed out emotional state that struck our nation. Individual gestures and facial expressions are defined within few brush strokes, repetition and direction of the strokes which give impression to the movement of the queues and landmark buildings which are identified in the individual paintings.

What makes these paintings so special and significant to our culture is that unlike images and videos seen through mass media platforms, these painting preserve this day, as a record of one man's force powerful enough to gather the whole community in unison. The act of gathering itself is seen by the artist as real celebration, letting our citizens truly reflect on the nation we have become, a nation Lee Kuan Yew has once imagined and dreamt about. Each painting reveals an insight into Boo's versatility and skillfulness as a painter depicting his most personal subject up to date. Boo's new works are meant to mark 29th March 2015 as a new beginning for our young nation and record the importance of having LKY as a role-model for the future of our country.
